

3 Steps to Strategic HR

Positioning your HR team to be perceived strategically — and to perform strategically — starts with understanding the connection between employee engagement and the success of your organization.

For the first time in over a decade, employee engagement in the U.S. dropped, from 36% in 2020 to just 34% in 2021.¹

Compared with those with low engagement, companies with high employee engagement experience:²

10%

higher customer loyalty

23%

higher profitability

66%

higher employee wellbeing

Want to help your company achieve higher engagement?
Read on for three steps to strengthen your HR strategy.

Step 01

Ground HR strategy on an understanding of the business.

HR leaders with experience in other business functions are almost twice as likely to possess a comprehensive understanding of business priorities and strategy.³

Survey respondents that said their company had a strategic HR team were 1.4X more likely to report outperforming competitors.⁴

Step 03

Leverage automation and move employees to value-add functions.

Manual processes waste time.

On average, global office workers waste four and a half hours a week on tasks they believe could be automated.⁷

Increase job satisfaction.

68% want their jobs to allow time for learning and implementing new responsibilities.⁸
